What are the key drivers of emotional attachment?

Structure of importance: In which community is the variable the most important? Variables like economy or the past perception of the community are relatively more important on communities with low attachment level. Dimensions linked to quality of health, and being good place for family with children or talented students are more important on communities with high attachment.

For each variable, red intensity represent in which community that variable is more important than the average. White colors are variables below importance average.

Summary Findings

Main key driver for attach is future perspective of the community. This occurs across all 26 communities, but especially on the less attached ones. Rest key drivers of attachment are different among communities. Quality of health and being good place for family with children or talented students are more important on communities with high attach.

Economy and past perception of the community are important for unattached communities. Communities with similar variable importance structure can be grouped together.
